Scene from the Armistice train, in the forest of Compiègne, after negotiators agreed to terms of an Armistice ending World War I. Marshal Ferdinand Foch, the lead negotiator for France, is second-from-right. Although the terms of the later Versailles Treaty were harsh, for Germany, Foch believed they were not harsh-enough. After all parties had signed the Treaty, Foch said: "This is not a peace. It is an armistice for twenty years." Twenty years and sixty-five days later, World War II began.

> You only have power over people so long as you don't take everything away from them. But when you've robbed a man of everything he's no longer in your power - he's free again.

> > Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn In The First Circle, Chapter 17

It is the 11th of November, 1918. Two trains approach each other in the Compiègne forest. A meeting, between the occupants, is about to take place.

At this spot, not far from Paris, warring nations end their conflict. Although the fighting (with ghastly consequences) has led to a stalemate, one side (the Allies) makes costly demands. The other (Germany) reluctantly agrees.

That agreement, the first step toward a treaty (signed in the palace of Versailles the following year), effectively requires Germany to give-up war making in general. It also demands the defeated county to pay huge reparations.

When the harsh terms are made public, people are stunned. One foot soldier, Adolf Hitler, later vows to do something about it.

That's where our story begins.

Questions 2 Ponder

Is It True that Robbing People of Everything Means They are "Free Again?"

The Versailles Treaty, which ended World War One, included very harsh terms for Germany. The consequences of that treaty caused Germans to become resentful.

Not only were Germans required to pay huge war reparations, they were forbidden from re-arming or buildingup their country's military forces.

This brings to mind something which Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn once said "...when you've robbed a man of everything, he's no longer in your power - he's free again."

What do Solzhenitsyn's words mean to you?

Do you think that concept also applies to countries? Why, or why not?

Might that concept have applied to Germany at the end of World War I (via the harsh terms of the Versailles Treaty)? Explain your answer.
