Thanks to Polk County's K12 Literacy and Writing leaders, Michelle Townley and Diane Plowden, the AwesomeStories archive of story-driven, evidence-based stories has been available to teachers and students.

Along with the archive, teachers have access to MakerSpace for the Humanities, a suite of apps that lets them and their students research, reflect, write, cite and publish their own stories, lessons, papers or projects.

The Polk County Public Schools district learning map is now linked to AwesomeStories and activities that match through the CurriculumMakerTM app. So stories, video, image, audio and original document media that fits the curriculum is just a click away.

Late in the year some teachers began to use the StoryMakerTM app to create stories of their own. You can see some of the historical stories that show usage of the AwesomeStories archive and linked world renowned archives in Polk County Florida Students Present Historical Stories.

And right here you can read creative stories about Polk County itself.

Thanks to creative writing instructor, John Davis of Harrison School of the Arts, and instructional technologist Virgina Richard of Polk State Lakeland Collegiate High School. And thank you to each of these intriguing young authors.

Enjoy the stories!
